Organisateurs: Richard TRACHSLER (University of Göttingen), Francis GRINGRAS (Université de Montréal), Olivier COLLET (Université de Genève)

Dans la présente session, on s'efforcera de présenter l'ensemble des recueils manuscrits qui renferment à la fois des romans arthuriens et des récits brefs, en particulier des fabliaux. On essaiera de dégager des constantes concernant l'emplacement et l'environnement des uns par rapport aux autres, mais aussi le jeu des intitulés et les programmes iconographiques dont ces exemplaires sont assortis. L'idée est de faire ressortir par ce biais un (ou des) schéma(s) communs qui permettent de rendre compte de l'organisation de ces volumes.

Thursday 28th July

9.15-10.45

3.31 A. Round Table on Emotions

Participants include: Carolyne LARRINGTON (University of Oxford), Corinne SAUNDERS (Durham University), Andrew LYNCH (University of Western Australia), Raluca RADULESCU (Bangor University), Anatole FUKSAS, Jane GILBERT, Johnny MCFADYEN (University of Bristol), Laura JOSE (Durham University), Anne BADEN-DAINTREE (University of Bristol), Sif RIKHARDSDOTTIR (University of Iceland), Helen COOPER (University of Cambridge), Frank BRANDSMA (Chair, Utrecht University), Jacqueline WESSEL (Utrecht University).

Everyone is welcome to participate in this Round Table, which follows three conference sessions on Emotions. The Round Table will be an open discussion of the methodology of emotions research in Arthurian Studies, with no presentations or mini-papers.

The Round Table will address questions (raised by the three bullet points below): What do we study? How do we study the emotional aspects of Arthurian romance? How do we negotiate the cultural differences between the 21st and the 12-14th centuries? Can new insights regarding the neurological basis and transfer of emotions, and the understanding of emotions as embodied, help us bridge the cultural divide?

Emotions are embodied responses to environmental changes which aim at placing the organism in circumstances conducive to survival and well-being (cf. Antonio Damasio). Since literature typically describes emotional responses to perceptual events and emotional decisions which underlie purposeful intentional actions, the understanding of narrative descriptions seems to depend on the very same interplay between perception, emotion and action which supports the decoding of behavioural patterns in the actual experience of natural and social environments.

Beyond striving for an emotional reaction on the part of the reader, the aim of many authors is to encourage readers to merge their own emotions with those of the protagonists. As a result of this interplay between text and recipient, there is an (emotional) correspondence between fictional and real emotions, which merits further study (cf. Rüdiger Schnell 2008).

Recent neuro-scientific evidence supports the claim that language referring to emotional states is only fully understood when those states are literally embodied during comprehension. Accordingly, philological investigations focusing on emotionally-related lexical clusters would make it possible to study single literary works (and their textual tradition) or to compare different ones in respect to the more or less integrated semantic systems that support emotional understanding in readers or listeners.
