La conscience a dû s'assoupir, comme la chrysalide dans l'enveloppe où elle se prépare des ailes.

Henri Bergson
L'évolution créatrice

Pour faire de la biologie, même avec l'aide de l'intelligence, nous avons besoin parfois de nous sentir bêtes.

Introduction 1
1. Philosophy of Life 3
2. Bergson and Bergsonism 7
3. Canguilhem on Bergsonism 16
4. Outline 21

Section I. Vitalism in Question: Two Different Critiques

Chapter I. The Image of Élan Vital:
Bergson on the Problem of Vitalism 25
1. Bergsonism in the Perplexity of Vitalism 29
   1.1. Dualism in Bergson’s Philosophy 29
   1.2. The Scheme of L’évolution créatrice 34
2. Bergson on the Difficulty of Vitalism 39
   2.1. Vitalism and its Relation to Finalism 40
   2.2. Vitalism and the Limits of Mechanism 45
3. A Critical Investigation of Élan Vital 51
   3.1. First Approach: An Alternative to Mechanism and Finalism 52
   3.2. Second Approach: The Image of Élan Vital 57
4. Evolution as Organization 60
   4.1. Two Modes of the Differentiation of Life 61
   4.2. Two Forms of the Organisation of Living Beings 73
5. Concluding Remarks 85

Chapter II. Life and Consciousness:
Bergson on the Constitution of Knowledge 87

5. Concluding Remarks

Section II. Concept of Life: Two Different Approaches

Chapter V.  The Method of Intuition: Bergson on Philosophy of Intuition
1. The Task of Philosophy of Intuition 211
2. Intuition: The Constitution of Absolute Knowledge 216
3. First Investigation of Intuition: Intuition in “Introduction à la métaphysique” (1903) 223
   3.1. Intuition and Metaphysical Knowledge 225
   3.2. Intuition, Duration and Metaphysics 229
   3.3. The Opposition between Intuition and Concept 234
   3.4. True Metaphysics as True Empiricism 241
4. Second Investigation of Intuition: Intuition in La pensée et le mouvant (1934) 245
   4.1. Intuition as Philosophical Precision 247
   4.2. Intuition and the Problem of Generalisation 256
   4.3. Intuition and the Stating of Problems 259
5. Concluding Remarks 261

Chapter VI.  Matter in the Evolution of Life: Bergson on Matter and Intelligence
1. ‘Matter’ in Bergson’s Philosophy of Life 263
   2.1. Life, Matter and Thermodynamics 285
   2.2. The Duration of Matter 291
   2.3. Matter and Memory 297
   2.4. Body, Brain and the Conservation of Memory 307
   2.5. Consciousness and Matter 319
3. Intellectuality: The Genesis of Intelligence 328
   3.1. Intelligence: The Critique of Understanding 331
   3.2. Concept: Origin and Renewal 337
4. Concluding Remarks 343
Chapter VII. Milieu, Machine and Monster:

Canguilhem on the Investigation of the Living

1. Life and the Living 346
2. The Living and the Concept of Individuality 354
3. The Living and Milieu 358
   3.1. Theories of Evolution: Lamarck and Darwin 363
   3.2. Ethology and Pathology: Uexküll and Goldstein 372
   3.3. Genetic Science and Morphological Mutation 378
   3.4. The Role of the Human Being in Milieu 380
4. Life and Technology 383
   4.1. Bergsonism: From Organology to Cyborgology 385
   4.2. Cartesian Mechanism: From the Mechanical to the Biological 393
5. Monster and the Problem of Anomaly 399
   5.1. Science of Monsters: From Imaginary Representation to Biological Concept 403
   5.2. Teratology: The Monstrous, the Anomalous and the Experimental 406
6. Concluding Remarks 410

Chapter VIII. Life, Concept and Historical Epistemology:

Canguilhem on the Concept of Life

1. New Knowledge of Life 412
2. Concept and Life 416
   2.1. The Formation of Reflex Concept 417
   2.2. The Concept of Life 427
   2.3. The Question of the Errors of Life 448
3. The Project of Historical Epistemology 459
   3.1. Life and Historical Epistemology 462
   3.2. Science and Scientific Ideology 468
