

La conscience a dû s'assoupir, comme la chrysalide dans l'enveloppe où elle se prépare des ailes.

Henri Bergson

L'évolution créatrice

Pour faire de la biologie, même avec l'aide de l'intelligence, nous avons besoin parfois de nous sentir bêtes.

Georges Canguilhem

La connaissance de la vie

Table of Contents

Acknowledgments	vi
Abstract	ix
Résumé	xii
Abbreviations	xv
Bibliographical Notes	xvi
Introduction	1
1. Philosophy of Life	3
2. Bergson and Bergsonism	7
3. Canguilhem on Bergsonism	16
4. Outline	21
Section I. Vitalism in Question: Two Different Critiques
Chapter I. The Image of Élan Vital: Bergson on the Problem of Vitalism
1. Bergsonism in the Perplexity of Vitalism	25
1.1. Dualism in Bergson's Philosophy	29
1.2. The Scheme of L'évolution créatrice	34
2. Bergson on the Difficulty of Vitalism	39
2.1. Vitalism and its Relation to Finalism	40
2.2. Vitalism and the Limits of Mechanism	45
3. A Critical Investigation of Élan Vital	51
3.1. First Approach: An Alternative to Mechanism and Finalism	52
3.2. Second Approach: The Image of Élan Vital	57
4. Evolution as Organization	60
4.1. Two Modes of the Differentiation of Life	61
4.2. Two Forms of the Organisation of Living Beings	73
5. Concluding Remarks	85
Chapter II. Life and Consciousness: Bergson on the Constitution of Knowledge
1. Life contra Knowledge?	87

2. Consciousness in the Evolution of Life	94
2.1. Freedom of Consciousness	96
2.2. Human Consciousness in Evolution	103
3. Life and Intellect	110
3.1. First Principle: Intellect as the Fabrication of Unorganized Matter	112
3.2. Second Principle: Intellect as the Constitution of Formal Knowledge	119
4. Intuition in Evolution: From Instinct to Intuition	127
4.1. Instinct as Sympathy	128
4.2. The Intuition of Life	132
5. Concluding Remarks	136

Chapter III. Life, Philosophy and Science:

Canguilhem on the Problem of Vitalism

1. Biophilosophy: The Return of Vitalism	137
2. Canguilhem on the Defence of Vitalism	143
2.1. Vitalism in Opposition to Mechanism	144
2.2. Vitalism and the Demand of Life	151
2.3. The Renewal of Vitalism	156
3. Concluding Remarks	166

Chapter IV. Life, Norms and the Question of Pathology:

Canguilhem on Philosophy of Norms

1. Vitalism: The Implication of Philosophical Norms	170
2. The Critique of Quantitative Reductionism	176
2.1. Broussais's Principle in Search of Objectivity	178
2.2. Normality: From Reduction of Norms to Statistical Averages	180
3. New Concept of Disease	182
3.1. Life as Normative Activity	183
3.2. Claude Bernard and the Concept of Continuity	186
3.3. Leriche and the Consciousness of Disease	189
3.4. Goldstein and the Constitution of Individual Norms	192
3.5. The Distinction between Health and Disease	196
4. Disease: The Obstacle of Life	202
4.1. The Constitution of Pathology	203
4.2. Rationality and Pathological Life	206

5. Concluding Remarks	209
-----------------------	-----

Section II. Concept of Life: Two Different Approaches

Chapter V. The Method of Intuition:

Bergson on Philosophy of Intuition

1. The Task of Philosophy of Intuition	211
2. Intuition: The Constitution of Absolute Knowledge	216
3. First Investigation of Intuition: Intuition in “Introduction à la métaphysique” (1903)	223
3.1. Intuition and Metaphysical Knowledge	225
3.2. Intuition, Duration and Metaphysics	229
3.3. The Opposition between Intuition and Concept	234
3.4. True Metaphysics as True Empiricism	241
4. Second Investigation of Intuition: Intuition in La pensée et le mouvant (1934)	245
4.1. Intuition as Philosophical Precision	247
4.2. Intuition and the Problem of Generalisation	256
4.3. Intuition and the Stating of Problems	259
5. Concluding Remarks	261

Chapter VI. Matter in the Evolution of Life:

Bergson on Matter and Intelligence

1. ‘Matter’ in Bergson’s Philosophy of Life	263
2. Materiality: The Genesis of Matter	273
2.1. Life, Matter and Thermodynamics	285
2.2. The Duration of Matter	291
2.3. Matter and Memory	297
2.4. Body, Brain and the Conservation of Memory	307
2.5. Consciousness and Matter	319
3. Intellectuality: The Genesis of Intelligence	328
3.1. Intelligence: The Critique of Understanding	331
3.2. Concept: Origin and Renewal	337
4. Concluding Remarks	343

Chapter VII. Milieu, Machine and Monster:

Canguilhem on the Investigation of the Living

1. Life and the Living	346
2. The Living and the Concept of Individuality	354
3. The Living and Milieu	358
3.1. Theories of Evolution: Lamarck and Darwin	363
3.2. Ethology and Pathology: Uexküll and Goldstein	372
3.3. Genetic Science and Morphological Mutation	378
3.4. The Role of the Human Being in Milieu	380
4. Life and Technology	383
4.1. Bergsonism: From Organology to Cyborgology	385
4.2. Cartesian Mechanism: From the Mechanical to the Biological	393
5. Monster and the Problem of Anomaly	399
5.1. Science of Monsters: From Imaginary Representation to Biological Concept	403
5.2. Teratology: The Monstrous, the Anomalous and the Experimental	406
6. Concluding Remarks	410

Chapter VIII. Life, Concept and Historical Epistemology:

Canguilhem on the Concept of Life

1. New Knowledge of Life	412
2. Concept and Life	416
2.1. The Formation of Reflex Concept	417
2.2. The Concept of Life	427
2.3. The Question of the Errors of Life	448
3. The Project of Historical Epistemology	459
3.1. Life and Historical Epistemology	462
3.2. Science and Scientific Ideology	468
4. Concluding Remarks	479

Conclusion	481
--------------------------	-----

Bibliography	498
---------------------	-----