

Table of Contents

Abstract	1
Acknowledgements	4
Table of Contents	6

Introduction..... 11

0.1. The starting point: interrogating the emigration practices of European minorities	12
0.2. Aspiration and its conceptual framework	18
0.2.1. Exploring migration desires: the concept of aspiration	18
0.2.2 The production of aspirations: aspirations, structure and agency	22
0.3. Ethnographic research and methodology	26
0.3.1. The general research framework	26
0.3.2. Research strategy and data collection	28
0.4. Research conditions: socio-political context, positionality, categories and limits	33
0.4.1. The political context of the research and its effect on the fieldwork	33
0.4.2. The ethnography and my position in the field	35
0.4.3. Dealing with my research categories in the field	39
0.5. Structure of the thesis	41

Part 1. Existential stuckedness and the development of emigration aspirations 45

Chapter 1. When the future is not as expected: existential stuckedness and the projection of hope abroad.	47
1.1. Personal aspiration and the shrinking of local opportunities for social mobility: the case of Fouad	48
1.2. ‘La galère’: the aspiration to a stable socio-professional life and the experience of stuckedness.....	52
1.3. ‘We will never be home’: stuck into otherness	57
1.3.1. ‘France is like my mother’: emigration projects and the question of belonging	57
1.3.2. Stuck into otherness.....	58
1.4. The projection of the future outside of home	64

1.5. 'Finding who I really am': international mobility and the quest for self-realization	67
1.5.1. Looking for fulfillment through indifference	68
1.5.2. Finding who you truly are and the aspiration to an uncharted society	70
1.6. Conclusion.....	72

Chapter 2. Where is the future? Global awareness from below and the imagined

geography of hope.....	74
2.1. The transnational circulation of imaginaries about Canada.....	76
2.2. Experiencing crisis, imagining El dorado: toward an imagined geography of possibilities	80
2.2.1. The understanding of Europe as a place of enduring crisis	81
2.2.2. Where is the future? A geography of global cities and high status societies	86
2.2.3. 'They give you your chance': El dorados and the chronotope of possibilities.....	91
2.2.4. Imagined geography and the spatio-temporal framing of Maghrebi French and Belgian.....	92
2.3. Montréal as a preferred destination: social options and imaginaries of an open society ..	93
2.3.1. 'Canada is more accessible for me': desired destinations and social options	94
2.3.2. Montréal imagined as a French speaking America	97
2.3.3. The question of the language: Montréal as a transitional space?	98
2.3.4. A country where you will become yourself. Montréal imagined as a model of societal openness	100
2.4. Conclusion.....	103

Part 2. Becoming a mobile subject. The development of migratory dispositions and the effect of migration infrastructure..... 105

Chapter 3. Widening the 'field of the possible': the development of migratory dispositions among Maghrebi French and Belgians..... 108

3.1. Becoming an exception: the development of migratory dispositions and the social background of young Maghrebi Europeans	110
3.1.1. The development of migratory disposition as the extension of the 'field of the possible': the case of Clarisse	111
3.1.2. Moving within or against the family background? The Emigration of the children against the emigration of the parents.....	114
3.2. Moving as 'a plus': the social valorisation of international mobility	117
3.2.1. The institutional promotion of the international mobility of human capital	117
3.2.2. The positive depiction of the 'expat'	122

3.2.3. When moving abroad becomes normative.....	125
3.3. The development of migratory dispositions and the accumulation of mobility capital ...	127
3.3.1. Access to international mobility: experiencing the privileges attached to the Belgian and French passports.....	128
3.3.2. Learning how to move: the progressive accumulation of mobility capital.....	132
3.4. Conclusion.....	138

Chapter 4. Channelling aspirations: navigating the complex selection process of Québec

.....	140
4.1. Québec and Montréal immigration policies: toward a flexible, economy-driven immigration	143
4.1.1. Describing a complex migration infrastructure.....	143
4.1.2. Selecting the ‘good migrants’: infrastructural politics of attraction of skilled, French speaking workers	150
4.1.3. Montréal as an actor within the infrastructural politics of migration	157
4.1.4. Infrastructural politics of migration and the production of non-linear migration patterns	160
4.2. Channeling aspirations: infrastructural politics and the discourse about the ‘good migration’	162
4.2.1. The infrastructural management of aspirations: encouraging immigration aspirations	162
4.2.2. ‘It’s your project’: the discourse about the good migration	164
4.3. The production of deserving subjects.....	169
4.3.1. ‘I fucked up’: Didier and the experience of being categorized as undeserving	169
4.3.2. Being selected as a form of recognition	171
4.4. Conclusion.....	174

Part 3. From Europe to Montréal: navigating new regimes of hope distribution..... 176

Chapter 5. Making Montréal home: pathways of incorporations	179
5.1. Context of arrival: regulatory and social infrastructure in Montréal.....	181
5.1.1. Regulatory infrastructure: a situation of extended ‘temporariness’	182
5.1.2. Social infrastructure: French, Belgian and Maghrebi infrastructures in Montréal	186
5.2. The social location of Maghrebi French and Belgian in the European and Maghrebi networks of Montréal.....	192
5.2.1. Maghrebi Europeans in Montréal: searching for a non-existent community	192

5.2.2. Origin, class, citizenship and the social location of Maghrebi Europeans within Europeans and Maghrebi populations in Montréal	195
5.3. Navigating Montréal society: carving out forms of stability through a diversity of pathways of incorporation	201
5.3.1. Building forms of stability through a diversity of pathways of incorporation: Karim, Zineb and Ilian	202
5.3.2. Incorporation in Montréal as a form of sedimentation	208
5.4. Remaking Frenchness – Urban culture and class as a basis for infrastructuring practices	210
5.4.1. From the cit� to Montréal: building up informal transnational migration infrastructures	211
5.4.2. Redefining Frenchness? Branding the culture of the cit� in Montréal	213
5.5. Conclusion	217
Chapter 6. Stuck again in Montréal? Perception of the future between new hopes and the limits of Canadian openness	219
6.1. Canadian multiculturalism, Qu�bec interculturalism: elements of context	220
6.2. Experiencing Montr�al regime of hope distribution: a sense of new possible futures	223
6.2.1. Out of the dangerous class: the ‘normalization’ of everyday life in Montr�al	223
6.2.2. The perception of Canadian multiculturalism and the production of new hopes	226
6.3. Stuck again in Montr�al? Socio-economic stagnation and transatlantic convergence of anti-Muslim discourses	227
6.3.1. Enduring prolonged transition and socio-professional precariousness in Montr�al: the case of Nahil	228
6.3.2. The limits of openness: the transatlantic convergence of anti-Muslim discourses ...	230
6.4. Ongoing aspirations: assessing social mobility in Montr�al and developing new aspirations	236
6.4.1. Who is stuck? Assessing mobility and immobility in a context of migration	237
6.4.2. The production of new emigration aspirations and the exclusion of return as an option	240
6.5. Conclusion	242
Conclusion	244
References	250

Appendix: table of key participants.....263